Mr. Cashin turned this tree stump into a cozy but simple home with windows, doors and a fireplace. It was an inexpensive dwelling perfect for a bachelor to live in.

Jeremiah also built the Wamberal Memorial Hall for "people to gather together for singing and dancing on a Saturday night".

He came from an Irish family with a proud heritage.

Mr. Cashin used to grow his own vegetables and he also owned some animals including; sheep, cows and chickens. Every Market Day Mr. Cashin would ride into Gosford on a horse and cart and would receive his mail from a paddle steamer. Then he would take his vegetables into the Market Place and sell them. His great nephew, Mr Albert Pike, remembers travelling in on the wagon to Gosford to sell the produce and purchase the familys' other needs that they were unable to grow or make.

Mr. Cashin owned a large parcel of land which he later sold to his nephew when he moved to Lidcombe in Sydney, where he later died.
